This architectural site plan illustrates the 'Haus der Kunst' complex in Munich. The main building is a large, dark-shaded structure with a complex, irregular footprint. To its right is a large, light-colored rectangular area, possibly a courtyard or parking lot, divided into several sections. The plan includes surrounding streets, a dashed line indicating a boundary or path, and a compass rose in the upper right corner showing North (N) and a secondary direction (S). The drawing is a technical line drawing with shading used to distinguish different building volumes.
